Public Policies and Rural Development in Africa

AD005

Course Overview

This course considers the development of approaches to rural development through the 20th and early 21st centuries. It then describes the components of a multisectoral strategy and theory of change for poverty reduction, and the crucial role of stakeholder collaboration. The course then explains in detail the key policy areas that will lead to the goals of productive and inclusive rural transformation.

Learning Objectives

At the end of this training course you will:

- Rural development approaches since the 1950s including modernization, the Green Revolution, Local Economic Development as well as regional approaches
- A theory of change for poverty reduction based on a multisectoral approach, and the role of stakeholder collaboration within it
- The policy areas where interventions are needed in order to achieve empowerment, economic inclusion and resilience building.

Audience

The courses aim to support an integrated, multisectoral approach to rural poverty reduction, by improving the knowledge and capacities of a range of professionals, including:

- Policymakers, policy administrators and policy officers
- Researchers
- Development practitioners
